Why Fupa Exists

Fupa launched on pump.tires and graduated to PulseX, where the original wrapped PLS liquidity pool was automatically burnt. However, the original developer rugged the project shortly after launch, causing the token to get dumped and left for dead.

I stepped in, purchased the majority of the supply on the open market, and created a mirrored wrapped ETH pool. Both liquidity positions are now permanently burnt, and contract ownership has been fully renounced. There were no insiders or pre-allocated team tokens.

About Fupa

Fupa is designed with a split-pool liquidity structure — one pool paired with wrapped PLS and another with wrapped ETH. This intentional design creates natural price differences between the two pools, which in turn creates arbitrage opportunities for traders.

This is not a meme coin. It is a cryptocurrency built with a specific technical purpose: to generate trading activity through arbitrage by design.

Tokenomics

Fupa has a fixed supply of 1,000,000,000 tokens. The original wrapped PLS liquidity was burnt upon graduation from pump.tires. A mirrored wrapped ETH pool was later added and also permanently burnt. The token has zero taxes and the contract is fully renounced.

Roadmap

- Phase 1 (Completed): Acquire majority supply, burn the wrapped ETH liquidity, renounce contract ownership.

- Phase 2 (Current): Build a small, trusted community through transparent communication. No false promises.
- Phase 3: Maintain a transparent project with no promises of development, buybacks, or burns. Any future actions by any holder are purely their own choice. There are no expectations of profit or ongoing work.

Conclusion

Fupa was built to create something transparent in an ecosystem full of rugs. The token is fully renounced, the liquidity is burnt, and the price will be decided purely by the market.

Legal Disclaimer

Fupa is a high-risk speculative asset. It has no intrinsic value and there is no expectation of profit. The price can go to zero. This is not financial advice. Only invest what you can afford to lose. DYOR.
